BUILDING AN INDIAN INNOVATION ECOSYSTEM ...

- Raghunath Marshalkar.

Innovation in India.

There are many obstacles in India for innovation. Innovation is not a simple and easy thing in India. There are many reasons for this there is no good education in India. There are not many researchers in India. There are four thousand six hundred twenty eight (4628) researchers per one million in America. There are five thousand three hundred (5300) researchers in Japan. But there are only one hundred and nineteen (119) researchers per one million in Indian. There are not good laws about new a creation nobody gives help to clever students to do research. Our government and officers and staff members are selfish and careless and lazy.

NO MAN IS AN ISLAND...

- Mino Masani

The young generation of today is not acquainted with the name Mino Masani. But the old generation know him as a sober person. He was a freedom fighter as well as a prolific writer. His book 'Our India' proved to be the best selling book of its time. The full name of Mino Masani was Minocher Rustom Masani but this freedom fighter who enjoyed a long life of 85 years (1905-1998) was popularly known as Mino Masani. He was the under member of Congress & socialist party along with J.P. Narayan and Achyut Patwardhan. After the political difference with Pt. Jawahar Lal Nehru he established this party but in a very short life. He favoured Russia later he was an active member of Swatantra Party. He was elected from Rajkot Gujarat for the first three Lok Sabha tenures.

The article is a good example of how the theme of the article should be treated in a very systematic manner.

KHADI ...

- M.K. Gandhi

Mahatma Gandhi the mastermind behind the unified protest of Indians the British rule, was not only a patriot. He was a social servant a visionary a worker who was eager to serve the down-trodden. He made the life of the British rulers difficult by using two tools, to leave the land. We need not write much about him in this introduction because his memory is still young in the minds of the Indians. The British would mockingly ask. Do you hope to win freedom by using khaddar and using spinning wheel. We are going to study a small speech by him. In most of his speeches and lectures he used to introduce khadi and spinning wheel in most of his speeches because this is the inspiration that God has given him.

THE METTLE OF SOLDIERS...

- R. Singh.

R. Singh is one of the budding Indian poets writing in English. The present poem was published very recently in a magazine named Active May 2015 issue. The poem is about a soldier guarding the borders of India. The moment we think of a soldier some things strike our mind. Let us not some at them

- ① His uniform and the rifle in his hand
- ② His straight walk and his vow to protect his motherland.
- ③ His courage fearless and willingness to suffer long separation from family.
- ④ His love and devotion to his motherland and his cause

There is not a to reason way.
There is but to do and die

Let us see what the poet R. Singh's sum about the soldier.

THE BANYAN TREE ...

- Rabindranath Tagore...

The Banyan tree, is a poem by Rabindranath Tagore, The poem is addressed shaggy headed. The Banyan Tree is standing on the bank of the pond. The little child use to seat in the window. He use to observe that the woman would fill these jars in the pond and the huge (हील) black shade of the Banyan Tree on the water of the pond.

The poet (little child) wanted to be the wind and blow through rustling branches. He also wanted to be the shade of the Banyan tree which lengthen with the day on the water and to be a bird who stands on the top most branch. He finally longed to be to ducks to float among the winds and shades.
